8. BACKGROUND

The Solomon Islands' biodiversity is crucial to its people's well-being, underpinning its subsistence-based economy and providing essential ecological, aesthetic, and cultural values. However, threats like habitat loss, invasive species, and climate change endanger this biodiversity. To counter these challenges, the United Nations Development Programme with funding from the Global Environment Facility (GEF) initiated SAFE* project aiming to safeguard indigenous species, halt land degradation, and promote sustainable resource use. The project adopts an integrated approach spanning landscapes and seascapes, government capacity building, community participation, and blue/green livelihood development. The project will use an integrated landscape-seascape management approach, effective government enabling and capacity, community participation, and the development of resilient blue/green livelihoods to achieve its objectives. It is worth noting that the land and seascapes of the Solomon Islands serve as a vital foundation for the lives and livelihoods of many local communities. As such, the project aims to implement a coherent and integrated strategy that promotes improved measures for preventing and managing invasive alien species, land and marine degradation, and unsustainable use of natural resources.

The overarching goal of the project is to reduce the risk to the indigenous species and ecosystems of the Solomon Islands from invasive alien species, land degradation, and unsustainable resource use. The project will achieve this by enabling and building the capacity of the government, promoting community participation, and creating resilient blue/green livelihoods. The project will focus on addressing barriers through four interrelated and mutually complementary components, which will ultimately enhance the effectiveness of the solution. This is to be achieved through four interrelated and mutually complementary Components that are focused on addressing barriers. The four Components of the project are:

Component 1: Enabling framework for safeguarding biodiversity, combating land degradation and securing a nature-based economy.

Component 2: Comprehensive risk management approach to address IAS threats to biodiversity and land degradation.

Component 3: Community-based integrated ecosystem management and threat reduction at land/seascape scale.

* Safeguarding Solomon Islands Endemic and Global threatened biodiversity and ecosystem services from key threats, particularly invasive alien species and unsustainable land use practices

Component 4: Knowledge management, awareness, M&E and gender mainstreaming

The design of the project is fully aligned with Solomon Islands' national priorities and will be implemented within the results framework stated in the Project Document. The strong political will of participating in ministries will be an important factor in sustaining the longevity of the project's outputs. The strong relationship between government institutions and the executing agency, as well as supporting organizations, will also contribute to sustaining project interventions and outputs.
